About the programme

S140827S – Security Management

Course outline

In today's complex business environment, organizations need to address a wide range of security requirements, using proven methodologies to design and implement programmes and solutions around policies and standards, governance and strategy. Many organizations realize that they need to change their structure, governance and approach to information security. This is often achieved through delivery of a complex set of interrelated and interdependent projects that drawn upon the full range of information security competencies that touch upon people, process and technology.

Objective

- Emerging technology trends and their impact on business
- Causes of security issues—external or internal?
- Solutions to resolve these security problems

S140917AS – Addressing Emerging IT Security Risks

Course outline

With the fast growing technology evolvement and new initiatives in Hong Kong and China such as cloud computing, mobile technologies, Bring Your Own Device (BYOD) and Big Data Analytics, they engender emerging risks such as data leakage, system break down and advanced persistent threat. The rapid growth of eBiz has increased the alertness of security in this digital era. Some governments have commenced rolling up new legislation on cyber risk and security to provide a proper legal framework.

Objective

- What are the "Emerging IT Security" risks
- What are the key drivers
- What are the risks impacting all industries and how do we address these risk challenges
