

Cybercrime from the defensive perspective

About the topic

Following the first session in October on cybercrime from the law enforcement perspective, participants should have general understanding about the focus of law enforcement agencies in the context of investigations into cybercrime, and their difficulties.

Against the background of rising incidence of cyber-crime and reported cases of cyber breaches, in part 2, the focus will be on defences. The speaker will provide practical insights into developing and sustaining a strategy for protecting enterprise data and at the same time aligning to regulatory and privacy regulations.

About the speaker

Jeremy Pizzala is currently the lead partner for EY's Financial Services Cyber Risk practice in Asia Pacific. Over the past 20 years, Jeremy has worked with clients in multiple industries, in particular Financial Services, Communications and Government, and has a deep understanding and experience across consulting, systems integration and business transformation.

In the past 14 years Jeremy has focused on Information Security and Technology Risk Management - ensuring that clients have appropriate actionable strategies in place to protect their organizational assets from both internal and external risk, while ensuring compliance with regulations and industry standards. In doing this, Jeremy has established consulting-led organizations across the Asia Pacific region, developed market offerings and led and motivated teams to ensure clients achieve tangible and sustainable business outcomes from their technology investments.

In addition to his client serving work, Jeremy has also held various roles in the banking industry, focusing on: the transformation of payment channels within the business markets segment to reduce processing costs and increase customer experience and satisfaction; development and launch of the first mobile payment platform into the home market; and implementation of stored value payment schemes in the consumer segment.

Jeremy is also a certified Quality Assurance Director, providing coaching to client delivery teams engaged in complex transformation projects.
